Lectionary Notes – Year C, a focus on Luke

A person who was an important mentor for me at one point in my 20's said in a talk to a group of which I was a part, "You need to fondle the truth." He went on to explain that this meant holding it gently, and turning it around like a Rubik's cube in your hand, using every sense to examine it from every angle and every side, looking for patterns and for new discoveries. One of the beauties of the Lectionary - with its focus on a different Synoptic gospel (Matthew, Mark, Luke) each year, along with readings from John's gospel scattered throughout all three years, especially during the high seasons of the Church - is that it gives us the opportunity to do that task of turning around and looking at the story of Jesus from four different angles, searching for patterns and for new discoveries. The year of Luke allows us to see the particular angles highlighted by this gospel.

Of the three synoptic gospels, Luke has the highest proportion of unique text, and these stories and teachings found in Luke include some of the most well known and beloved passages of the New Testament. Luke provides one of the two canonical sources of the infancy stories of Jesus, with elements quite different from those found in Matthew. Only Luke tells the story of Elizabeth and Zechariah, parents of John the Baptist. Only in Luke do we hear the beautiful poetry of Mary's "Magnificat", of Zechariah's prophetic hymn, or the moving words of Simeon in the Temple – "Lord, now let your servant depart in peace ... for my eyes have seen your salvation ... a light for the gentiles and the glory of your people Israel."

Luke is also our source for some of Jesus' parables which are perhaps better known than any others – the parable of the Good Samaritan, and the three parables about the lost sheep, the lost coin and the lost (prodigal) son.

In the prologue to the gospel (Luke 1: 1-4), Luke talks about his practical purpose in writing – to create an orderly account based on the traditions handed on by "eyewitnesses and servants of the word" (Verse 2, NRSV). In doing this, one of the key theological tasks Luke wishes to achieve through this account is hinted at in the phrase "the events that have been fulfilled among us" (Verse 1). Luke pays great attention to the Hebrew Scriptures, weaving together quotations and allusions to prophecies and fulfillment in a continuation of the biblical narrative of salvation. This is the firm foundation of the faith that his community needs and the continuity which Luke emphasises will also be the base – especially in the companion work, The Acts of the Apostles – from which the people of God, inspired by the Holy Spirit will set out in radically new directions, not least the incorporation of Gentiles into God's people.

As we read Luke's gospel today, we too are encouraged to reflect on our own incorporation into the people of God, our own part in the ongoing story of salvation, and our calling to continue to give witness to "the events that have been fulfilled among us".

How are Sundays identified in this table?

Sundays and other days which are special "Feast Days" are simply identified by their name (eg. Ash Wednesday, Palm Sunday, Christ the King). Otherwise, Sundays are identified by the number of Sundays after the start of a Season (Epiphany 2, Easter 3, Pentecost 16). It is important to note that sometimes one of the Sundays after a Season starts has its own name but it is still counted for the purposes of counting Sundays in that season (eg. Pentecost 1 is named Trinity Sunday, but it is also the first Sunday after Pentecost, so the next Sunday is Pentecost 2). A long standing practice in some Christian traditions counts all the Sundays which are not in a special season (ie. those after Epiphany and after Pentecost). This count of Sundays in "Ordinary Time" (from the same root word as "ordinal" thus meaning "counted time") varies depending on when Easter lands in the year. We indicate this number in brackets in case it is useful in reading lectionary resources from traditions who identify Sundays in Ordinary Time.
